discourse markers and modal particles are fuzzy linguistic categories that are difficult to describe the contributions in this volume go beyond this statement they discuss the intersection between modal particles and discourse markers and examine whether or not it is possible to draw a line between these two types of linguistic expressions on the basis of new synchronic and diachronic data from speech and writing from european and asian languages or cross linguistically the authors answer the question whether discourse markers and modal particles are distinct categories whether they form a cline or whether modal particles are a subcategory of discourse markers this common question shows up throughout all chapters which makes the book to a coherent whole by disentangling the complexity of categorizing multifunctional expressions this book also sheds new light on the processes of meaning extension the traditional discourse and modal functions are complemented by interactional and textual ones a must read for functional linguists the chapters of this volume scrutinize the interplay of different combinations of case animacy and semantic roles thus contributing to our understanding of these notions in a novel way the focus of the chapters lies on showing how animacy affects argument marking unlike previous studies these chapters primarily deal with lesser studied phenomena such as animacy effects on spatial cases and the differences between cases and adpositions in the coding of spatial relations in addition theoretical and diachronic issues related to case and semantic roles are also discussed for example what is case how do cases develop and what are the functional differences between cases and adpositions the chapters deal with a variety of different languages including uralic languages indo european languages basque korean and vaeakau taumako the book is appealing to anyone interested in case animacy and or semantic roles
